

Progressive land policy		Neoliberal land policy
Municipalities working for the less well-off segment of their population to compensate for growing inequalities	1. Target group of land policy	Municipalities supporting the affluent segment to stimulate the "growth machine"
Municipalities developing long-term strategies to gain independence from short-term constraints	2. Time horizon of land policy	Municipalities developing their strategy within legislature periods targeting short-term benefits
Public authorities using public real-estate assets to secure social gains (preventing dismantling of social benefits, supporting non-profit initiatives, e.g. through the	3. Strategic objective of public real-estate assets	Municipalities shaping land policy according to best investment practices (generating profit to fill public coffers)
Municipalities combine planning instruments based on public-law (e.g. zoning) with public landownership to support planning goals.	4. Strategic use of land policy instruments	Municipalities favor the use of contractual agreements based on private-law for increased flexibility in front of the strict regulations of public-law instruments.
Municipalities open to new taxes or also debt to promote long-term public project implementation	5. Financing of land policy	Municipalities counting on the private sector through PPP in case of funding shortage
Municipalities developing long-term strategies to capture land rents	6. How land policy deals with land rents	Municipalities favoring the transfer of land rents to the private sector so as not to hinder private investment.